Summary

I've been a leader my whole life I was put in a position where I needed to learn leadership. Being a quarterback your whole life you are put into tough situations where you need to critically think fast because the team's success is riding on your success. I grew up being taught respect and how to carry myself as a man. The more I've experienced life I've learned things such as patience, persistence, determination, and resolve. Because in life everyone should know that nothing is going to go exactly as planned, so your whole purpose should be how are you going to react when life throws challenges in your face. My accounting class with Professor Stephen Heath is a perfect example. Going into it I thought accounting was nothing but numbers and math, but on the first day of class, he explained that accounting has almost nothing to do with math. It's more like a puzzle you are trying to put together. And I had to change my mindset and thought process in an instant. Being a football player at the College of San Mateo I have a very busy schedule, but I always find a way to take care of my schooling as well. Since being in college I've only gotten a B in 2 classes in my first semester while earning a 4.0 in every semester since. Being in accounting has been a tremendous experience. I've always wanted to learn about finances and know the business side of it as well as the personal side. So much to where I've applied myself to my accounting class more than any class I ever have. Achieving a 100% on the mid-term (being the first student of Heath's to do so) and currently preparing for the final exam. I am earning my AA this summer of 2023 and plan on transferring to a 4 year in 2024 and eventually earning a master's.
